State Police institute new policies during COVID-19 outbreak

The New York State Police advise anyone experiencing an emergency, as always, should call 911. When placing an emergency call, advise dispatchers if you or any members of your household are experiencing flu-like symptoms. This information will ensure that first-responders can prepare to prevent the spread of any illnesses.

In addition, until further notice, the State Police are suspending employment fingerprinting, along with child safety seat checks at our stations.

"Public safety is a mission priority for our troopers," stated Superintendent Keith M. Corlett. "While we understand that suspending these services is an inconvenience to the public, this is an extraordinary circumstance. The State Police are committed to doing what we can to assist the state's emergency response to COVID-19."

The public will be notified employment fingerprinting and child safety seat checks will once again be provided to the public. Visit the online newsroom, nysp-news.com, for the latest updates, which will also be posted to New York State Police social media pages, Facebook, Twitter and Instagram.
